It is crucial that U.S. law enforcement is made aware of the dynamics of the threat of ISIL/Islamic State (IS), its impacts on the U.S., and diverse law enforcement responses available against this menace. The full-day, in-service, training program, ISIL/Islamic State: Global Threats, Impacts on the U.S., and Law Enforcement Responses, addresses these and related timely topics as set out below. During the past two years, IS has led, directed, and inspired over 120 terror attacks in 23 countries (besides Iraq and Syria), causing over 1,700 deaths and 2,000 injuries. Likewise, in that period, over 90 individuals have been prosecuted in the U.S. in relation to IS-linked terrorist activity, including planned attacks on U.S. soil or intentions to travel to Syria and join the caliphate.

Following introductory remarks, the history of global jihad (e.g., selected ideologues, groups, and their impact on current jihadists) will be addressed as well as current jihadi threats here and abroad. Next, an overview of ISIL/Islamic State is covered, including various facets of the quasi-state, including its intentions and capabilities. ISIL/Islamic State terror attacks abroad and in the United States, as well as other case studies, will be analyzed.

Subsequently, multifaceted law enforcement responses that can be undertaken to combat terrorism in general, and ISIL/Islamic State-linked violence in particular, will be covered. Among the diverse counterterrorism topics covered are: profiling, terror financing and counterterror financing, online and offline discovery of terror suspects, the roles of informants and undercover agents, intelligence and law enforcement databases and networks, suspicious activity and transaction reports, joint terrorism and other task forces, fusion centers, Joint Counterterrorism Assessment Team, Terrorist Screening Center, National Counterterrorism Center, community-oriented policing, the roles of traffic stops and calls for service, officer safety, international cooperation, leveraging technology, and specific law enforcement responses to terror incidents, lessons learned, among other issues.

The program will include a handout on the course, PowerPoint presentations, and discussions on the various topics, multimedia materials, scenarios, as well as question and answer sessions. The presenter of the program is Dean C. Alexander, Professor and Director, Homeland Security Research Program at Western Illinois University. Prof. Alexander, who lectures on counterterrorism issues to law enforcement and military in the U.S. and abroad, has published several books on terrorism, including The Islamic State: Combating the Caliphate Without Borders (Lexington Books, 2015).
